Wrangell Tribe gifted Totem Park

By DAN RUDY
Sentinel writer

During Sealaska Corporation's annual shareholder's meeting, held this year in Wrangell late last month, the Native organization bestowed ownership of an important local landmark to its hosts.

In remarks made during the meeting, corporation director Richard Rinehart explained he had recently put forward a proposal to the board to transfer ownership of Kiks.ádi Totem Park to Wrangell Cooperative Association, the community's federally-recognized tribal government.

The Totem Park lies at the bottom of Episcopal Avenue, where it joins with Front Street. Prior to its becoming a park, the property had been the site of the Sun House, or Gagaan Hít, one of the houses belonging to the Tlingit Kiks.ádi clan. A totem dedicated to the clan's Chief Kahlteen was created by noted carver William Ukas, or Yiika.aas, and raised on the site in 1895.

The Kahlteen totem stands at the forefront of Wrangell's Kiks.ádi Totem Park. Originally the site of the Kiks.ádi clan's Sun House, the property was acquired by Sealaska Corporation and dedicated as a heritage park in 1987. Ownership was returned to the local tribe last month.

A splash of color

Volunteer Scott Glaze sends forth a shower of colored powder along the route of this year's Color Run, a 5K fundraiser benefitting Wrangell Medical Center's long-term care unit. Held on Saturday at City Park, medical staff and residents alike joined in, dusting participants as they approached the finish. The run was the second held so far in Wrangell.

"That's where I'm from. That's my tribal house," said Rinehart. Having been raised in Wrangell and now a clan leader in his own right, it was his recommendation that Sealaska return the property to local leadership.

He noted that Wrangell was among the five Alaskan communities left "landless" in the 1971 Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act. When it was formed the following year, Reinhart explained Sealaska had acquired the culturally significant plot when it became available in the mid-1980s in order to preserve it for the community.

A replica of the Kahlteen Totem was commissioned along with several others by master carvers Steve Brown and Wayne Price and raised in 1987 at the dedication of Kiks.ádi Totem Park. When it was restored, the pole was placed in the same spot its predecessor had stood.

According to Brown in a 2016 interview with the Sentinel, this pole depicts at its top Deix Shaa, or Two Women, a mountain located on the mainland. Just below it is the large frog that serves as the Kiks.ádi clan's primary emblem. Below that is a depiction of the Raven, the moiety to which the Kiks.ádi belongs.

"In general, we have watched most of our land given away," Rinehart commented. "We thought this would be really awesome if it came back here to Wrangell."

Sealaska's board of directors agreed, voting unanimously to approve the arrangement. At the shareholder's meeting on June 23, presidents Richard Oliver of the WCA and Anthony Mallott of Sealaska signed a transference of title.

"It's a little bit of history being made at this very moment," Rinehart observed. "Gunalchéesh," which means thank you in Tlingit.

In his words of thanks to Sealaska, Oliver noted the park's connection to the Raven moiety compliments that of Chief Shakes Island, whose clan house is tied to the Eagle moiety. WCA maintains only a few properties, including the Shakes house, its cultural center on Front Street and a facility being converted into new offices at Wood Street and Zimovia Highway.

"The return of this Kiks.ádi Totem Park really gives us balance back," Oliver said. "We were lacking in the Raven side. And this is going to restore balance to our people here. I can't thank you enough."

Transference of the park was not the only good news Wrangell received during last month's annual meeting. WCA learned its dance troupe will be the lead group at Celebration 2020, a biennial gathering held in Juneau that celebrates the Tlingit, Haida and Tsimshian cultures. Sponsored by Sealaska, Celebration is one of the largest gatherings of Richard Rinehart, on the board of directors for Sealaska Corporation.

Southeast Alaska Native peoples and is the second-largest event sponsored by Alaska Natives in the state. The event draws about 5,000 people, more than 2,000 of which are dancers. Thousands more watch the event online, according to the corporation's estimates.

Sealaska shareholders also received some positive news at last month's meeting. The corporation touted 2017 as one of the most successful years ever, recording a net income of $43.3 million.

A public hearing on the proposed Wrangell East Highway project is scheduled for July 18 in the multi-purpose room of the new elementary school. The project, which would link Wrangell with the back channel and new airport, is scheduled to be built in the next fiscal year. Willis L. Walker, state district highway engineer, disclosed plans for the hearing.

The route of the proposed road, its design and construction will be explained at the hearing, Walker said.

The project is one of two major road jobs the state plans to complete here in the next two year.

Another - the Church Street-Zimovia Highway job - is scheduled for completion on July 15, 1969.

The 6.6-mile job will provide paved road from the state ferry terminal to the Alaska Wood Products mill. Green Construction Co. is contractor for the $1.3 million job.

A third major construction project - the Wrangell Airport - is nearing completion. The $1.5 million project includes construction of a 5,000-foot gravel runway.

State officials have allotted another $2.4 million for extending the runway and paving it. The second phase is expected in the 1969-70 fiscal year.

A summer program designed to promote reading for fun and computers starts July 5, announced librarian Kay Jabusch.

Using eight Apple computers and 4 Macintoshes on loan from the school, the program is designed for children in grades K-8, but preschoolers may attend. The parents of preschool children who attend must read to their child at least one hour a week and help the child use the computer games at the library.

The program winds up Aug. 14, with a party for the children who have taken part in the entire program.

Basing her estimate on previous years' enrollment, Jabusch expects 50-70 children to complete the program. She noted that, because the computers are on loan from the school, children should have little trouble using them. Children who are not familiar with the computers or their programs must have a parent present. However, because third-graders through eighth-graders will receive instruction on the computers, they do not have to have parents present.

The program requires children to use the computers at the library for at least one half-hour each week, and read for at least one hour a week. Charts will be kept for each child.

ADEC annual report: the water's fine

By DAN RUDY
Sentinel writer

With the start of the borough's new business year beginning Sunday, residents Monday found summaries for local water quality during 2017 in their postal boxes.

Conducted last year by the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation's Drinking Water Protection Program, sampling measured treated water for various inorganic and radioactive contaminants, as well as gauging residual disinfectants and disinfection by-products still present. Across the board, Wrangell's water fell within regulatory thresholds for safety.

The results showed an improvement in water quality over the previous year. During the second quarter of 2016, a slightly higher than acceptable reading of haloacetic acids (HAA5) had been detected, at 61 parts per billion, above the 60 ppb limit. In 2015 the measurement had been even higher, at 67.9 ppb. Last year's readings came in at an average of 47.3 ppb, with a low of 36 and high of 55 taken.

HAA5 is considered a byproduct of chlorination during the water treatment process, and along with other disinfection byproducts trihalomethanes (TTHM) and bromate, are considered a health risk. Long-term ingestion of higher concentrations of these can increase cancer risk for some people. As in previous years, Wrangell's measurements for TTHM and bromates were well within acceptable thresholds.

The new water report indicated process improvements in the department as well. During the second quarter in 2016 Wrangell's water department had failed to collect two of its quarterly water samples, specifically for HAA5 and for bromate, a common compound found in municipally treated water. The department has since regained compliance with collecting its samples.

Wrangell's water comes from a pair of reservoirs on Mount Wrangell, with the more elevated of the two feeding into the lower, from which the city's treatment plant draws its supply. Water is treated in a series of processes, which includes coagulation and flocculation to remove impurities, and "slow sand" filtration through a sedimented medium.

Because the water comes from an open, unprotected source, chemical disinfectants are added before storage to kill bacteria and other microbial contaminants. ADEC also assesses municipalities' source water for vulnerabilities, and has given Wrangell's a rating of "very high" susceptibility. Its water system has been rated a high susceptibility for bacteria and viruses, very high for nitrates and nitrites, high for volatile organic chemicals, high for heavy metals, and medium for other organics and synthetic organic chemicals. A high vulnerability does not confirm the presence of any of these contaminants, but only gauges the potential for contamination.

Inorganic contaminants like copper and lead were also detected during sampling taken from consumer taps. The presence of each typically comes from erosion of natural deposits or, more often, corrosion of household plumbing systems. Lead levels came in at 6.5 ppb, well below the federally-set safety threshold of 15 ppb. At elevated concentrations, lead can cause serious health problems, in particular for young children and pregnant women. Those concerned about lead levels in their own fixtures can seek out further information and testing materials at www.epa.gov/safewater/lead.

Dan's Dispatch

By Representative
Dan Ortiz

Recently, China announced that it will add an additional 25% tariff on seafood imports. China is Alaska's top seafood customer, spending $1.3 billion on exports last year.

This tariff increase will directly impact tens of thousands of fishermen, other fish-industry employees, and Southeast Alaska's economy. According to the McDowell Group, the fishing industry produces $2 billion in labor income alone, and a total economic output of $5.2 billion per year.

Although I am not in a position to change Chinese policy, I can - and will - continue to support the fishing industry on the state level. This past session, I sponsored three bills pertaining to our fishing industry that the legislature passed. HB56 "Commercial Fishing Loans" increases the sub-category amount an Alaskan can borrow from the Commercial Fishing Revolving Loan Fund. HB76 "Mariculture Revolving Loan Fund" allows the revolving loan program to include shellfish hatcheries. HB354 "Dive Fishery Assessments" updates the SARDA self-assessment election process.

As the Chair of the Fish and Game Finance Subcommittee, I

also led the creation of the Fish and Game budget. For Fiscal Year 2019, we maintained funding and added eleven new management projects, which will directly positively impact our fishermen by creating more catch opportunity. I also work closely with Fish and Game, fishermen, and industry participants to steward our commercial fishing resources. The fishing industry is vitally important to the well-being of Southeast, and the entire state of Alaska, and I will continue to protect and support it on the state level.

If you have any questions about these fishery-related bills, or suggestions for future ones, don't hesitate to email me at Rep.Dan.Ortiz@akleg.gov or call at 907-247-4672.

King salmon run on Yukon River well below average so far

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) – This year's king salmon run on the Yukon River is on track to be the second- or third-worst ever recorded.

Just over 90,000 kings were counted as they swam past the Pilot Station sonar site near the mouth of the Yukon River this summer, the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner reported. The run has thus far been similar to 2015, the second-worst year for king salmon ever recorded, after 2013.

The migration from the Bering Sea to the mouth of the river is usually more than halfway over by this point in the summer.

Fishery managers expect enough kings will return upriver to satisfy a treaty with Canada and allow enough salmon to reach their spawning grounds where the fish reproduce, the Department of Fish and Game said in a recent statement about the Yukon River.

Restrictions on subsistence fisheries will be necessary to meet the escapement goal.

The department restricted fishers to 6-inch gill nets, instead of the 7.5-inch size in many areas of the Yukon.

The smaller mesh is too small to catch larger king salmon, but is still enough to trap smaller, but more numerous chum salmon.

The chum salmon run is relatively strong this year, and it's expected that a large number of chum salmon will make it upriver because of the commercial fishery restrictions in the lower river.

The department has also cut in half the number of subsistence fishing hours announced in the pre-season schedule for several districts.

Dead seabirds washing ashore again in Western AK

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) - Scientists estimate that thousands of dead seabirds are washing up along the coasts of western Alaska.

Common murres, an abundant North Pacific seabird, have been found dead on shores from Shishmaref to St. Lawrence Island since last month, KTUU-TV reported Wednesday.

A dead bird has been examined at the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's migratory bird office in Anchorage and more are being sent in to be tested, said Robb Kaler, a wildlife biologist for the service.

"The results come back pretty quickly. Currently, they determined the cause of death appears to be due to emaciation, starvation," Kaler said.

Scientists are examining what led to the birds' starvation and Kaler said there are likely multiple factors at the root of the problem.

"You've got birds that are starving, so we know why they're dying - they're dying of starvation," Kaler said. "But the question is why are they not able to find food? What's happening?"

Thousands of the birds were found dead along the Pacific coast following a massive die-off in 2015 and early 2016.

Scientists pinned the cause on warm ocean temperatures that affected the birds' food source. The problem was exacerbated by vicious winter storms.

Another factor could be neurotoxin poisoning from algal blooms, which travel through the food chain, Kaler said. The ocean temperatures could be causing the harmful algal blooms to flourish.

Online dashboard gives view of drug seizures across Alaska

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) - Alaska State Troopers are letting the public know the amount of drugs and alcohol being seized by the statewide drug enforcement unit each month through a website.

Troopers hope the online drug seizure dashboard connects with communities and encourages residents to start having conversations, KTUU-TV reported last week.

"It's not just an issue in your home it's not just a personal use issue that happens at home," said Capt. Michael Duxbury of the drug enforcement unit. "It's spilling onto the roads, creating gun violence. It's having an impact on how many vehicles are being stolen. It's burglaries those kinds of things that it translates to."

Much of the state was designated earlier this year as a high intensity drug trafficking area, a classification allowing access to new federal grant funding. The state then rolled out the online resource that tracks alcohol and drug seizures.

In April, more than 2,300 grams of heroin, 29 grams of cocaine and 841 grams of methamphetamine were confiscated.

In May, the unit seized more than 1,700 grams of heroin, more than 1,300 grams of methamphetamine and about 13 grams of cocaine.

While cocaine production is a growing problem, Duxbury said heroin and meth are already widely abused in the state.

"We had enough seized heroin alone last year to dose everyone one and a half times in the entire state using the 2016 census," Duxbury said.

New numbers will be added to the dashboard around the 20th of each month, troopers said.

Alaska regs to ban mandatory tip-sharing

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) - Alaska will prohibit businesses from requiring employees to share tips among other workers.

The Juneau Empire reports Lt. Gov. Byron Mallott signed new regulations that go into effect Friday to ban mandatory tip pooling.

Employees will still be able to voluntarily share tips, but the regulations forbid employers from forcing the action.

In a public comment submitted to the state earlier this year, the Economic Policy Institute estimated that Alaska employers would take about $14.4 million in tips each year from employees. According to tax records, Alaska workers make $40.1 million in tips each year.

The new regulations do not affect existing state laws that require employees to be paid at least minimum wage without tips calculated into that pay.

Molly Parks Estate files wrongful death claim against Petersburg Borough and William "Chris" Allen

By RON LOESCH
Publisher

PETERSBURG - The Estate of Molly Parks filed a Wrongful Death claim in Petersburg Superior Court on May 18 against the Petersburg Borough and the driver of the Parks and Rec. van, William "Chris" Allen. Parks, 18, was one of two persons killed on July 4, 2016 following a vehicle collision on N. Nordic Drive.

The complaint states that Parks death was a result of Allen sustaining a seizure while driving the Parks and Rec. Dept. vehicle.

Parks, Allen, Catherine Cardenas, 19, and Marie Giesbrecht, 19, were assigned to set up rest stations for the 4-mile July 4 race that morning using the department's van.

At approximately 7:27 a.m. Allen lost control of the van and reached speeds estimated at 52 mph. According to the complaint, Allen slumped over into the passenger area after which the van veered sharply to the right, vaulting over the guardrail and crashed upside down into an embankment. Investigating Alaska State Troopers said Allen is believed to have had a seizure, causing him to lose control of the vehicle. Molly Giesbrecht, the daughter of the Petersburg Borough Manager, was also killed in the collision.

Parks attorney states that Allen's seizure disorder existed as far back as November 2011 while attending a technical school to become a certified electrical lineman. Allen suffered a seizure, falling off an electrical pole.

The complaint lists nine incidents where Allen suffered seizures with three events happening while he was employed with the Parks and Rec. Dept.

The complaint states that Petersburg clearly knew about Allen's seizure disorder months prior to July 4, 2016.

Prior to his hiring at Parks & Rec. Allen applied for a job with the Petersburg Public Works Dept. and was denied hire because he could not drive because of his seizure disorder. Hagerman, according to the complaint, called the Parks & Rec. Dept. to ask why it had hired Allen since he could not drive.

The complaint concludes, "Defendants' actions are comparable to playing Russian roulette with Molly Parks' life. Chris Allen pulled the trigger, but Petersburg handed him the gun. It was not a matter of "if" Chris Allen would have a seizure while driving a Borough vehicle, but "when."

The lawsuit seeks special damages, general damages, interest, Plaintiff's attorney fees and costs, punitive damages and other relief the court deems just and equitable.

The Petersburg Borough Attorney Sara Heideman told The Pilot via email, "The Borough has not yet been served with or seen a copy of the complaint which was filed by the plaintiff's lawyer, and the Borough will appropriately answer the suit after it has had an opportunity to review it. The Borough has cooperated fully with the investigation into this tragic accident, and will continue to do so."
