Legal representation discussed in school board meeting

By CALEB VIERKANT
Sentinel writer

Legal representation for the Wrangell school district was discussed in Monday night's school board meeting. With the new school year beginning August 23, the board had several policy items to discuss. Among them was the potential hiring the law firm Sedor, Wendlandt, Evans, and Filippi for legal representation. The contract presented to the school, according to board member Aleisha Mollen, was fairly standard. Board member Dave Wilson, however, said that there was some wording in the contract he was concerned about.

The portion of the contract Wilson took issue with was the final portion of Section E., "Represented Party." The contract states that the law firm "may represent others having interest adverse to persons or entities with which Client is associated and we may do so without need for us to notify Client or secure Client's consent."

Mollen said that this basically means the law firm is allowed to represent other clients and that, because of attorney-client privilege, they cannot talk to the school board about those other clients. Similarly, the law firm cannot talk to other clients about the Wrangell school district. However, Wilson said he was confused about the wording, and was worried that there might be a conflict of interest, or the law firm could place other clients as a higher priority than the school.

"Does that mean that they're not notifying us, that we could be caught with our pants down?" Wilson asked. "It's a concerning thing to me that we could all of a sudden find ourselves on the short end of the stick."

After some discussion on the wording of the contract, the board agreed to temporarily recess while they sought clarification. They called John Sedor, a member of the law firm, but were unable to reach him. After calling the meeting back to order, and some further discussion, a vote was called to table the discussion until the next meeting. This vote ended in a tie, however, and the motion failed. The board then held a vote to accept the contract as-is. This, too, ended in a tie. Finally, the board agreed to add the contract to next month's agenda, and in the meantime to receive clarification from the law firm.

Other items discussed in the meeting include:

Reports from the elementary and secondary principals, as well as a report from the superintendent;

Acceptance of donations from the Wrangell Cooperative Association for the secondary schools' athletic programs and Evergreen Elementary's EATS garden;

Acceptance of the FY 2019 Migrant Literacy Grant Award; and Acceptance of the Indian Education Formula Grant Award.

Firefighting efforts in Telegraph Creek, British Columbia ongoing

By CALEB VIERKANT
Sentinel writer

The wildfire near Telegraph Creek, British Columbia is still burning. According to Amy Riebe with the British Columbia Wildfire Service, firefighters have contained about 11 percent of the blaze, but work is still ongoing.

Telegraph Creek is a small community along the Stikine River. In early August, according to Riebe, the fire was started by a lightning strike.

"It was first reported on August 1," she said. "There were quite a few fires reported at that time when lightning went through British Columbia."

The community of Telegraph Creek has been evacuated, and another town to the south, Glenora, has also been put under an evacuation order. As of August 21, approximately 96,000 acres of land have been burned. A damage assessment to the area has begun, Riebe said, but it will be awhile before that is completed.

"The recovery effort is underway, but it will take awhile," she said.

Riebe also said that 179 firefighters and support staff are working to put out the fire. She added that several members of the Tahltan Nation, which made up a large percentage of the Telegraph Creek population, are also assisting.

In Southeast Alaska, many communities are pitching in to help however they can. Alaska Waters, a Wrangell tour/charter company, has offered a special discount for several excursions to raise money for Telegraph Creek. Fifty percent of the proceeds will go to support the Telegraph Creek Community. Information can be seen on their website, alaskawaters.com.

The dance given last Thursday night at the Wrangell Hotel for the young men who were going to enlist was a very pleasant affair. The spacious sample room had been converted into a ball room for the evening and had been tastefully decorated in the national colors. The flags of England, France, Italy and Belgium mingled with the stars and stripes. Many enjoyed the fine music and the dancing and nearly all remaining until the strains of "Home, Sweet Home" sounded.

The affair was arranged by Mrs. R. V. Dailey and Mrs. T. R. Dailey and the honor guests were Chas. and Edward Lynch, Colonel Mason and George Sylvester of Wrangell; Ed Moran of Shakan and A. C. Anderson of Tokeen.

These men constitute the largest number that has gone from here at one time since May 23 when Wrangell's quota of the draft departed for Ft. Seward.

They departed Friday on the Steamer Princess Alice followed by the good wishes and cheery farewells of the host of relatives and friends who accompanied them to the boat.

Mayor Fred G. Hanford today received word from Alaska Chairman Dr. W. W. Couneir, of Juneau, of his appointment as chairman in Wrangell to take charge of the forthcoming National War Fund drive. The drive starts the second week in October and is a combination of all organizations, except the Red Cross doing war work directly for the entertainment and comfort of the fighting forces.

National quota is $125,000,000 with Alaska asked to raise $80,000 of it. This drive will eliminate separate drives by various war working organizations as they will all share in the National War Fund total. Additional details will be announced later, Chairman Hanford said.

Wrangell's Girl Scout Troop No. 150 recently boarded the M/V Matanuska for a trip to Petersburg.

Leader Jonna Kautz and co-leader Roxy Coblentz escorted Dena Kautz, Kimberly Coblentz, Dara Rilatos, Catherine Jeffers, Brandi Dillard and Nicole Sullivan on the two-day excursion June 24-26. The group stayed at the Presbyterian Church, where they all pitched in to cook and clean up for themselves. They met local Girl Scout Troop No. 113 and No. 127 for an outing at Sandy Beach and rejoined them the following day for a pizza party. The girls also enjoyed a visit to the local library and the elementary school playground. During their short stay, each girl made new friends and agreed that the folks of Petersburg made them feel very Velkommen.

Staying healthy for the new school year

By CALEB VIERKANT
Sentinel writer

With another school year kicking off, a common concern for parents, teachers, and school staff is keeping children healthy. Being in a classroom environment, there are always concerns that one kid getting sick will lead to several kids getting sick.

Dr. Buck Bania, with the SEARHC AICS clinic, listed some common "back to school" sicknesses people should be aware of, and common ways to prevent/cure them. The best way to avoid getting sick in school is to avoid germs as much as possible

"It's hand washing, hand washing, hand washing," Bania said.

He also recommended that kids stop picking their noses and that they also be taught how to properly cough. Bania said that the common way to cough, by putting a hand over one's mouth, is ineffective for stopping germs. He suggested that kids practice covering their mouth with their whole arm like a "Dracula cape" to avoid spreading anything contagious.

"Lice is the big thing people worry about in schools," he also said.

According to the Center for Disease Control, approximately six to twelve million lice infestations occur in the United States annually among children aged three to eleven. The CDC also says that lice can only be transferred from one person to the next by direct contact with the hair of the infected person. Bania said that parents should always check for lice if their child complains about their head itching. He added that while treatment is relatively simple, getting lice is a random event and can't really be avoided.

"It has nothing to do with personal hygiene if you get infected, it's just bad luck," he said.

Throat and ear infections are also common illnesses that can occur in schools. Bania said that there are many things that can cause throat infections, but antibiotics are not required for treatment unless it is strep throat. As far as ear infections go, Bania said that antibiotics should only be taken if they persist after three days.

Bania added that having a fever is not the only sign that people are sick, and not having a fever does not necessarily mean that person is healthy. People can be contagious both before and after showing symptoms of sickness, he said. Parents should keep a close eye on their children for any symptoms and use their best judgment about whether or not they should go to school.

The last thing Bania mentioned was the importance of children being vaccinated. Vaccines, he said, were a good way to keep healthy and avoid diseases. He said that there were a percentage of people who had become afraid of vaccines, due to a report linking vaccinations and cases of autism. However, he said that this paper was debunked and no such link exists.

Bania suggested that parents visit the CDC's website for further advice on keeping children healthy through the school year, at www.cdc.gov under the "healthy living" section.

Structure fire reported on Zarembo Island

By CALEB VIERKANT
Sentinel writer

A fire was reported at about 6 a.m. Tuesday morning on Zarembo Island. The fire, according to a Facebook post by the U.S. Forest Service, is a tenth of an acre in size, and has consumed several structures at the Evergreen Timber logging camp. No injuries have been reported, and logging company employees are fighting the fire.

According to Christy Gardner with the Forest Service, the fire was put out by logging company employees, though the Forest Service did come to the site to offer assistance. The fire was contained quickly and did not spread beyond the camp.

"Housing units only were lost," she said. "They [the logging company] were able to move some of their outer items away."

Gardner added that the cause of the fire had not been discovered yet.

Another school year starts

By CALEB VIERKANT
Sentinel writer

As summer draws to a close, Wrangell's schools prepare for another year of education. Families across the island are also preparing for the year by purchasing school supplies, getting new clothes, and registering their kids for school.

Wrangell High School was open last Thursday for families to get their kids registered for the new school year. Representatives of Evergreen Elementary, Wrangell Middle School, and Wrangell High School were present to help people get through the registration process.

According to David Macri, principal of the middle school and high school, roughly a third of the school district's students had been pre-registered online.

Many students were present with their parents during registration. One was Aaydn Losinski, who will be entering the first grade this year. He said he was looking forward to school starting. His mother, Karey Loshek, said that Aaydn had been a little sad that all the summer activities he had been a part of were coming to an end, but was looking forward to school.

Other students present at registration were Lynn and Jade Balansag. Lynn will be a high school sophomore this year, while her sister Jade is entering the second grade. Jade said she is also excited for school.

"You get to do art and play fun games," she said.

Elias Decker, soon to be in the eighth grade, said he was less excited for the new school year. He said he prefers hands-on activities to book learning. His mother, Kellie Decker, said Elias had spent the summer mowing lawns and doing odd jobs. Elias said that he was looking forward to shop classes and P.E.

The first day of school in the Wrangell School District is today, August 23.

Stacey Ann Doak

Obituary: Rainie Dae, 32 & Stacey Ann Doak, 8

Rainie Day Doak, 32, and Stacey Ann Doak, 8, passed away on June 11, 2018.

Rainie was born in Wrangell on May 19, 1986 to Jinx Clark and Brad Byrd. She lived in Wrangell most of her life. She married the love of her life, David Doak, and had three daughters, Renee, 12, Stacey, 8, and Kayleigh, 6. She loved the great outdoors and took her girls camping often. She also had a great love of reading.

Stacey was born in Ketchikan on March 30, 2010 to David and Rainie. She was happiest with family and friends and especially her Auntie Booga. She inherited her mother's love of books. You could always find her in the school library before school started.

They were preceded in death by Rainie's sister Shannon "Booga" Gillen.

Surviving family members are husband/father David Doak and Stacey's two sisters Renee and Kayleigh; Rainie's mother and stepfather, Jinx and Steve Clark; brothers Tim Gillen Jr., Shane Gillen, Aaron Gillen (Carrie); and two sisters Autumn Gillen DeWindt (Kory) and Misty Byrd.

A celebration of life will be held this Sunday, August 26 at the American Legion Hall from 1-5 p.m. with a potluck to follow.

Block party raises funds for Wrangell Warriors

By CALEB VIERKANT
Sentinel writer

Last Saturday afternoon the downtown pavilion was filled with people coming out to support Wrangell's boys AAU basketball team, the Wrangell Warriors. The block party offered hamburger and hot dog meals, along with treats like popcorn and cotton candy. There were numerous activities for people to participate in, as well, such as a face painting booth, dunk tank, and other games. According to Aaron Angerman the money raised from the block party will go towards new equipment and uniforms for the team and to help cover travel expenses.

The Amateur Athletic Union, according to the group's website, was founded in 1888 and is one of the largest nonprofit sporting organizations in the world. The AAU was created to "establish standards and uniformity in amateur sport," its website reads, and to promote amateur/youth involvement in sports.

Angerman, who helps coach the Warriors, said that kids from fourth to eighth grade are welcome to participate in their team. Registration begins in September and their season runs from January to March. The team had 17 members last year, according to Angerman.

"We don't want to interfere with Parks and Rec basketball which is going to start next month, and middle school basketball is going to start a few weeks after that," Angerman said. "So we sort of cut down and as soon as those programs are over we pick up so the kids can keep playing."

The Wrangell Warriors are a relatively new team, Angerman said. They have been around as an AAU team for about a year. Wrangell also has an AAU girls team, he said, which has been around for about seven or eight years. This year he is hoping to see the team grow and participate in more competitions. While planning to travel to tournaments, he said that the team wants to host a tournament of their own in Wrangell, too.

"We hope to make the community aware that our boys AAU program exists," Angerman said in an email after the fundraiser. "The girls' AAU program blazed a trail for us and has rejuvenated girls [basketball] at the high school level by preaching fundamentals and providing extended opportunities for play. The boys team was long overdue. It's a great group of kids and we're not just aiming to improve them on the court, but off the court as well. We want to put out a program that our community is proud of, that parents are excited to send their kids to."

The Wrangell Warriors can be found on Facebook under "Wrangell Boys Club Basketball." Angerman said that the Facebook page might see a name change soon, and that a standalone website is in the works. More about the Amateur Athletic Union can be found at www.aausports.org.

High school swim team holds first meeting, Aug. 24 deadline to sign up

By CALEB VIERKANT
Sentinel writer

Lead by Jaime Roberts, members of the new Wrangell High School swim team and their families held their first meeting recently. This is the first time that the high school has ever had a swim team, to Roberts' knowledge, and she said that this year the team was being funded by a "student support and academic enrichment" grant from the U.S. Department of Education. Roberts said that there are currently 11 swimmers on the new team, but they have until August 24 to get new members signed up.

The purpose of the meeting was mostly to pass out information on what gear swimmers will need and to discuss the team's schedule. Roberts, who also coaches for the Wrangell Swim Club, said that equipment like kickboards and buoys would be shared between the two organizations. Roberts said swimmers will need to provide their own swim caps, two pairs of goggles, and two swimsuits.

"We've been okayed for black swimsuits or a combination of black and red," she said.

Roberts also suggested swimmers get a fleece jacket of some kind to keep warm when not swimming during competitions.

The high school swimming season opened on August 1, Roberts pointed out, and made extra emphasis on August 24 being the deadline for any students who are interested to sign up for the team. She said that the team will meet for practice Monday through Friday, 3:45 to 5:15 p.m. The regional competition will take place in Petersburg October 26 - 27. Should the Wrangell swim team succeed in regionals, they will go to Anchorage for the state tournament in November.

Along with the practice schedule, Roberts also provided swimmers with a list of her expectations for the season: Swimmers will swim for fun, not to please parents or coaches; swimmers will show up on time for practices, meets, and team events; every activity will be treated as an opportunity to learn; swimmers will commit to giving their best effort; swimmers will let the coach know if they have to leave early; swimmers will keep in mind that they're representing their school and their coach; swimmers will be good sports; attendance at all team meetings, practice sessions, and swim meets is mandatory unless excused by the coach; active participation in all team-related activities is expected; swimmers will wear a team swim cap at all meets; school will be put first; swimmers will practice good self-care; and for the duration of the season, swimmers will not consume any energy drinks.

"If I had it my way it would be forever," Roberts said about the energy drink ban. "I don't know if I even need to elaborate on that, but that's just going to be a policy for me ... You're going to be excited enough when you're at a swim meet, you do not need any help from caffeine."

The swim team's first competition will be August 31 - September 1 in Petersburg.

Life is full of opportunities.
Be prepared.

Alaska Fish Factor

By LAINE WELCH Fisheries columnist

Alaska pollock is the top fish catch in the world for four years running

As Bill Governor Walker prepares to sign a bill this week enacting the Alaska Mariculture Development Plan, 16 new applicants hope to soon begin growing shellfish and seaweed businesses in just over 417 acres of tideland areas in Alaska.

The new growers will add to the 35 farms and 6 hatchery/nurseries that already are producing a mix of oysters, clams, mussels and various seaweeds. Eventually, sea cucumbers, scallops, giant geoduck clams and algae for biofuels will be added into the mix.

Most of the mariculture requests in Alaska are located in Southeast and Southcentral regions and range in size from .02 acres at Halibut Cove to 292 acres for two sites at Craig.

Data from the state Department of Natural Resources show that two farms have applied at Kodiak totaling nearly 37 acres, and one Sitka applicant has plans for a 15 acre plot. Other communities getting into the mariculture act include Seldovia, Port Chatham, Juneau, Naukati, Cordova, Ketchikan and Gustavus.

In 2017, Alaskan farms produced 11,456 pounds of clams, 1,678 pounds of mussels, 16,570 pounds of seaweeds and 1.8 million oysters.

Oysters always have been the dominate mariculture crop, and several farmers have added kelp to their acreage. The seaweed takes just three months to grow to harvestable size and can provide a ready cash flow to farmers while they wait for up to three years for their bivalves to ripen.

Kelp is poised to be one of Alaska's biggest crops with one of the biggest payouts.

The first Alaska crop of 15,000 pounds was harvested last year at Kodiak, which yielded a payday of about $10,000 for grower Nick Mangini. This year he tripled his take with 42,000 pounds of two products, brown kelp (alaria) and sugar kelp.

Mangini said 75 percent of the crop was alaria, for which he received 90 cents a pound and 45 cents a pound for the sugar kelp, adding up to more than $33,000.

The kelp is marketed under the name Kodiak Island Sustainable Seaweed (KISS) and sold to a California company called Blue Evolution.

"We are making it into products that are familiar to North American consumers, so our first items were pastas and macaroni and cheese," said founder Beau Perry. "It actually deepens the flavor profile. Everyone from moms and dads who are feeding it to their kids to gourmet chefs are responding very positively."

It's all a drop in the bucket compared to the real potential for the new industry in Alaska.

"If only 3 tenths of a percent of Alaska's 35,000 miles of coastline was developed for oysters, for example, it could produce 1.3 billion oysters at 50 cents adding up to $650 million a year," said Julie Decker, director of the Alaska Fisheries Development Foundation and head of an 11-member mariculture task force established in 2016 by Governor Walker through administrative order.

The task force concluded that mariculture crops could yield $1 billion for the state within 30 years.

The governor plans to sign the bill at grower Trevor Sande's farm near Ketchikan.

Treadwell talks fish - Politics aside, one thing that can be said about Republican candidate for governor, Mead Treadwell, is that he knows fish.

"One thing I know is that fishing is Alaska's largest employer and you can't have good fishing unless you have good science and transparent management," he said in a phone interview.

Treadwell touts research as the cornerstone for fisheries sustainability.

"I believe we could double or triple the endowed science available for North Pacific, Bering Sea and Arctic marine research and I think it's very important to do," he said.

Treadwell was a past chairman of the U.S. Arctic Research Commission, involved with the North Pacific Research Board and one of the earliest advocates for the Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute and Alaska's Community Development Quota program.

As a student of international fisheries policy law, Treadwell said his first job was as a 'foot soldier' working with then Dept. of Interior Secretary Wally Hickel in the fight for the 200 mile limit that removed foreign fishing fleets from U.S. waters.

Treadwell pointed to other protein industries and said he believes Alaska's seafood industry could add jobs and revenues by using more of every fish.

"Other industries sell everything but the squeal," he said. "I think we have to do much more with all of the fish and add the value here so we are not exporting jobs. Let's look at our incentives for keeping more processing plants open year round it might be a fix in power costs or something to do with tax policy."

Treadwell said he is a big supporter of growing the state's mariculture industry, including biofuels.

"As governor you control the tidelands. We can back that up with a process that helps financing and helps grow a new industry. I'm excited about that," he said. "And this opportunity with energy is also significant. I've visited some of the labs that are working on algal energy and we have to look at these kinds of opportunities to diversify our economy."

As governor, Treadwell said he also would fight to get more Chinook salmon for Southeast Alaskans who have lost over 60 percent of their catch quotas in the treaty with Canada.

"We have lost too much of that allocation and it's just not fair," he said.

Numerous attempts to interview Mead Treadwell's Republican opponent, Mike Dunleavy, were unsuccessful.

Fish smell - Fish scientists proved years ago that the tiniest traces of copper in water can affect a salmon's sense of smell. Now, new research shows that increasing levels of acidity in the oceans does the same thing. The damage is caused by the ocean's absorption of carbon dioxide, which is generated primarily by the burning of fossil fuels, like oil and coal. The CO2 combines with seawater to produce carbonic acid, which makes the water more acidic.

Fish use their sense of smell to find food, elude predators, locate spawning areas, even to recognize one another. Losing it could mean big trouble for the fishing industry, tourism and global nutrition.

"In the marine environment it has some serious implications. If there are predators around and the fish are not able to respond to these danger signals in the water, they would be the next snack for these larger predators," said Jason Sandahl at Oregon State University who was one of the first to show how contaminants can disrupt the chemical balance of sea creatures.

His studies showed that copper levels at just two parts per billion impaired small salmon's sense of smell.

Last month, scientists at England's University of Exeter compared the behavior of juvenile sea bass at carbon dioxide levels typical of today's ocean conditions with those predicted for the end of the century.

The results showed that the sense of smell in the fish was reduced by half. They also found that sea bass exposed to the more acidic conditions swam less and were less likely to react when encountering the smell of a predator. The longer the fish were in high CO2 levels, the worse they fared.

The scientists concluded that future levels of carbon dioxide can affect fish population numbers and entire ecosystems. While their study was on sea bass, the researchers said they believe all species important to commercial and sport fisheries are likely to be affected in a similar way, and possibly crabs and lobsters as well.

Pollock is tops -Alaska pollock is the top fish catch in the world for four years running, toppling anchovies from Chile and Peru.

More than 40 million commercial fishermen were out at work on global waters on nearly five million boats, of which 90 percent are under 40 feet.

Those numbers have held steady over several years, said the latest State of World

Fisheries and Aquaculture report compiled every other year by the UN's Food and Agriculture Organization.

It is the only publication of its kind that oversees fisheries track records and trends around the globe.

Highlights from 2016 show that the world's total marine catch was nearly 80 million tons, a slight decrease due to that drop in anchovies.

Aquaculture represented 53 percent of all seafood eaten and it is the fastest growing food production sector on the planet. Nearly 600 different species items are farmed around the world - number one is carp.

Growing aquatic plants, especially seaweeds, has more than doubled in 20 years topping 30 million tons.

In per capita terms, global fish consumption has grown about 1.5 percent per year - from under 20 pounds in 1961 to 45 pounds.

Americans eat far less fish, averaging about 15 pounds a year. So how are the world's fish stocks doing?

Sixty percent were called 'maximally sustained' and 33 percent were classified as being fished at unsustainable levels.

Problem regions were the Mediterranean, Southeast Pacific and the Southwest Atlantic, with 60 percent of their stocks called overfished.

By contrast, the Northeast, Northwest Pacific and Central and Southwest Pacific had the lowest levels of overfishing ranging from 13 to 17 percent.

The World Fisheries Report said that impacts from climate change are likely to push down global ocean production by six percent by the year 2100, and 11 percent in tropical zones.

PUBLIC NOTICE

The U.S. Department of Commerce, Economic Development Administration (EDA) is considering a request for Federal assistance from the City and Borough of Wrangell to construct a Water Treatment Plant in Wrangell, Alaska. Pursuant to the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) and the National Historic Preservation Act (NHPA), EDA is conducting an assessment of the potential of the proposed project to affect the environment and/or historic properties.

The project involves the design and construction of a new water treatment system to be located on the site of the existing water treatment plant. A new treatment building would be constructed within the filled area of the existing plant facility to house two parallel DAF plants. The treatment process involves dissolved air flotation accompanied with chemical coagulation and gravity filtration, with a design flowrate of 1.8 mgd. Chemical feed tanks and associated pumps and control systems will be located in the new treatment building. The existing structure housing the slow sand filters will be converted into clearwells to provide CBW with an additional 0.9 million gallons of water storage. A portion of the existing control building will be used for chemical storage. A gravity sewer line would be constructed to transport backwash waste from the new water treatment building to the existing Wastewater Treatment Plant located just downhill from the water plant. A standby generator and bulk fuel tank would also be installed at the site.

The project will be located at the site of the existing water treatment plant, east of Zimovia Highway, accessed from the extension of Wood Street. Project information is available for review at City Hall, 205 Brueger Street, Wrangell, AK 99929, 907-874-2381.

If you have any information regarding potential impacts environmental resources or historic properties associated with this proposed project, please provide it in writing to:

Backpack pickup

A backpack pickup was held at the Wrangell Cooperative Association's cultural center last Thursday morning. WCA Tribal Administrator Esther Ashton said that the backpacks, which were filled with school supplies, were a part of a program organized by the Central Council of Tlingit and Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska. Ashton said they had about 120 backpacks this year. "It's a really great program," she said. "The kids come in, they're so excited. The backpacks are wonderful. You have everything from Northface to Nike and they're really high quality backpacks. It's a great program that we're happy to participate in."

Shoemaker Bay Harbor prepares for refurbishing

By CALEB VIERKANT
Sentinel writer

Shoemaker Bay Harbor was built in 1977 with a life expectancy of 25 to 30 years, according to Wrangell Harbor Master Gregg Meissner. Now, at 41-years-old, the harbor is finally getting rebuilt. Meissner said many of the renovations are to ensure the harbor meets the needs of modern boats. The renovated Shoemaker Harbor will be similar to Heritage Harbor, he said, which was built in the early 2000s.

"Since 40 years ago boats have gotten wider and deeper, so the configuration will be a little different. The berths will be a little wider, the fairway's a little wider," he said.

Shoemaker Bay Harbor will be undergoing renovations, starting in September. All boats and cars in the harbor need to be moved by August 31, according to Harbormaster Gregg Meissner.

The harbor currently has five "fingers" coming off the main 750-foot dock where people can dock their boats. Meissner said that the renovated dock will have four fingers, with berths allowing for larger boats. The two gangways that currently exist will also be replaced with a single gangway in the center of the harbor. He added that construction crews will also dredge the harbor to make it a little deeper, and that the new dock will be kept higher off the water than the old one, helping it to last longer.

"Their goal is for a 50-year design life," he said.

Meissner said that all boats currently parked in the harbor, and all cars in the parking lot, need to be moved by August 31. Renovations will begin in early September, and work is expected to be complete around June or July 2019.

"It's kind of a pain in the butt, everyone gets mad about the inconvenience, but it's nice when you're done," Meissner said. "The final completion is July 15 for punch list items but they'll be done prior to that, I want to say I think it's June. If we have a good, open winter maybe it goes faster, who knows?"
